STATUES FALL BEFORE SUBWAY

Washington and Lafayette Memorials in Union Square Must Be Moved to Give Room for Underground Work.

BIG STATION TO BE THERE.

This and a Great Public Comfort Place Will Occupy Much of the Space Now Taken Up by the Statuary.

The march of progress now demands removal of the equestrian statue of Washington from its present site in Union Square. Not only will official hands be placed upon the monument, but as well upon that of Lafayette, which now adorn the Square.

Colonial roadways, the Hall of Records and other places and things of historic interest have fallen before the advance of the great subway work, but this is the first time that the removal of statues of such historic characters as Washington and Lafayette have been

Work on the subway station in Union Square has progressed to such a degree that the immediate removal of both statues is demanded. Originally the plans of the Union Square station were not as extensive as those recently determined upon. These now demand more space, and as the statues are in the way President Cantor has written to Park Commissioner Wilcox requesting that the two great figures be taken down and moved to another part of the President Cantor recommends that the statue of Washington be placed within the square lines at a point directly facing Broadway at the curve of that thoroughfare at Fourteenth street, facing south. The figure of Lafayette, he says, might either be removed to the west side of the square or taken to a site in vantageous public place.

It is the plan of the subway contractors to erect at Union Square one of the largest stations along the entire route of the underground way. Near by will also be established a large public comfort station, which is planned to stand in close proximity to the underground station.

There will be a large dome topping the subway station, which will be provided with electroliers, which will branch out in all directions, supplying a flood of light to the station. These improvements demand the space occupied by the statues and work cannot progress, the contractors say, until the statues are taken down.

It is understood that the powers have refused to accept the second payment from China. which was offered Jan. 1.

If they either agree to the Chinese duties being doubled or insist to a threatening point on payment under their interpretation of the protocol, the United States will suggest, on its own account, that the dispute be referred to The Hague.

Brother Long Believed to Be Buried in Louisiana Swamps Cries "Let Me In!" at Frank Waterhouse's Door.

(Special to The Evening World,)
MILDLETOWN, Conn., Jan. 14.-In the village cemetery at Tylerville civilwar veterans have year by year on Memorial Day placed a wreath to the memory of Private George Waterhouse. The records show that he was shot in 1864 while fighting for the Stars and Stripes in Louisiana. He left an aged father and mother and a younger brother, Frank, when he went to the front with the Twentyfourth Connecticut Volunteers in 1862. Banks's command and was in the Red River campaign. Frank Waterhouse since the death of his parents has kept up the old homestead. He was aroused by a knock at the door Saturday night. "Frank Waterhouse, let me in!" called a voice, shaking with emotion. "I am your brother George.'

Frank opened wide the door. Despite

Frank recognized the big brother to whom he had waved good-by forty years ago, and their hands clasped. George said that he had been left for dead on a Louisiana battle-field, but some negroes found him, and, observing that life was not extinct, they changed his uniform of blue for one of gray, took him to a cabin and nursed him back to health. He changed his name and drifted to Texas, where he started a cattle ranch and became prosperous.

Later he settled in Pennsylvania.

There came to him recently a longing to see his old home. He will spend several weeks with his brother, and will then return to Texas to inspect his ranch.
